INWELLE CENTRE PROFILE

Established in 2005, Inwelle Study and Resource Centre is a Nigerian non-profit NGO based in Enugu. We envision a world in which students and teachers would just walk into a Centre and find it equipped with a rich library, computers, internet and reading rooms to aid them in their information search and students will find it equipped to aid them in the performance of their academic tasks, and teachers will find it equipped to aid them in effective teaching. Above all, we recognize the disparities and the inequities that confront indigent girls in their quest for economic attainment in the Nigerian milieu. We aim to provide both enriching educational tools to the communities where we locate a satellite Centre. We have established such satellite centres in three rural communities. We hope to establish up to 200 such centres by 2016. We started this Centre with 1000 books and two computers. These Centres focus on educating the local population regarding the usage of computer and internet, supporting students and scholars with their activities in the centre and leveraging girls to achieve academically and materially, especially in STEM. The Centre runs the following projects: "Catch-Them-Young"; "Academic Boot Camp," "Mass Computer Literacy," "Project Success," and annual symposium. Catch them Young is a project set out for children of primary and secondary schools only. We train them on how to make use of the computer and provide them with the requisite skills and knowledge to function effectively in the 21st century, tutor them on school work, give them educational counseling on how to pass their exams and how to recognize opportunities and utilize them. The Academic Boot Camp is a project developed for girls aged 17-23 and is designed especially to prepare indigent girls in hinterlands and urban slums aspiring to enter into higher institutions of learning. Each year, the Boot Camp focuses on one area of empowerment. For 2011 to 2016 project years, Inwelle Centre is focusing on leveraging girls to embrace life in the fields of science and technology, especially in hi-tech computer fields. Mass Computer Literacy is a workshop run monthly for all segments of the society, especially youths. The participants are introduced to the usage of the computer throughout class course.

Director's Message

- The specifications for locating a satellite centre in a community are as follows:
- Community involvement leading to sustainability and self-sufficiency
- Outline of programme of Activities that reflect Inwelle Centre vision and mission
- Commitment to sending annual report to Inwelle Centre, not later than February of the following year after a programme year
- Providing a room equipped with shelves and access to the internet
- Sponsoring two or three girls to be trained at Inwelle Centre to learn how to run the satellite centre
- Commitment to paying stipends to the girls who run the centre.

The two satellite centres already established are thriving because of community commitment. They now have internet access and individuals donate books to the centres. The Communities also hold educational activities. Also, individuals in the community are beginning to sponsor participants. Usually, we supply each community with 1000 books and two computers to start them off. The community is then mandated to start internet cafes and conduct adult education programmes for the villages. They use retired educators public spirited individuals, and retired government functionaries in their midst to tap into local government and state resources to aid them in running programmes. We find this strategy more effective because the community will be more committed to the success of a centre that serves them, rather than the ones that serve all and sundry. The two centers established in the remote villages of Ozalla Ezimo, in Udeno and Inyi in Igboeze North Local Government Areas of Enugu State are thriving because of such community commitment. Particularly, Inyi Community showed up in great numbers for the annual symposium in December. The community sponsored 20 participants to the symposium. Kudos to Inyi community.

For the future, part of Boot Camp activities will be the Library on Wheels vehicle will be stationed for two days in chosen communities where the centre will locate satellite resource centres. These will be communities that indicate their interest in partnering with Inwelle Centre and show preparedness for such partnership. The vehicle will be equipped with books, a smart station, comprising a computer that has internet access, VCR/DVD player, projector and screen. It will also have 3-5 laptops and two desktops with internet access. During the one week the vehicle will be stationed in each community, Inwelle Centre staff will be on ground to teach I.T. to youths and loan out books and give talks/seminars on the benefits of girls being encouraged to embrace life in the fields of computer technology. This way, the Centre reaches more participants. Another objective is to sensitize parents and community leaders to support girls who show interest in acquiring skills in the field of hi-tech computer. The centre staff will also show videos that will speak to the opportunities that abound in the field.

Sadly, this year also recorded the death of a strong supporter of Inwelle Centre since the Centre's inception. Mrs. Anne Jeffers, wife of Mr. Eugene Jeffers and mother of Dr. Mary Owens, a member of Inwelle Advisory Board passed on—2012. See details of her obituary on page — In everything, we give thanks to God.

Thank you Inwelle Centre supporters, trustees, advisors, and management for an exciting year of successfully carrying out projects in the difficulty circumstances posed by the Nigerian milieu.

PROFILE OF RITA KANAYO ONAH
THE LIFE STORY OF AN INDIGENT GIRL

BACKGROUND:

I am a female and born on 10th February, 1985 to the humble and impoverished family of Mr and Mrs Thomas Onah of Inyi, Enugu-Ezike, Igbo Eze North Local Government Area of Enugu State of Nigeria.

My father used to be a peasant farmer and wine tapper before he had an accident which incapacitated him while my mother who now is the breadwinner of the family is a petty trader.

EDUCATION:

I completed my primary education in 1997 and through the assistance of a benevolent uncle I was able to go for a secondary education at the University Town of Nsukka. However, in my second year, I lost my compassionate uncle to the cold hands of death. To say the least, I was utterly devastated. It was like my secondary education was to end but I took the bull by the horns and through doing menial jobs like washing clothes and dish cleaning for people in their homes and also through donations from people, I was able to complete my secondary education in the year 2003 when I obtained both my West African Secondary School Certificate and that of the National Examination Council in flying colours.

LIFE AFTER SCHOOL:

After my secondary education, it was my wish to further my education by going to the University. I was able to raise the money to buy the application form for the Joint Admission and Matriculation Examination which I was no one to sponsor travelled to different relation or the other to my education to no avail. served both as a salesgirl the money saved from enrolled and got trained After the training, I got a my bid to save money the salary was nothing to hardly pay for my rent

That turned out to be our greatest undoing for my mother before long became critically ill. The whole little savings I had made went into treating her without result and if not for the intervention of our Church members who contributed and sent her to hospital, she would have been dead today.

Since 2010 to date I have been working in a secondary school in my community as an office assistant on a monthly salary of N5,000.00 ($35). The supposed salary is not even regular. As at date, I have not been paid in the last five months.

The executive Director of Inwelle Study and Resource centre, Professor Christiana Okechukwu, Ph.D. and the boot camp participants travelled to Odid Ogidi in Anambra State to establish a third Inwelle Resource satellite centre. She confirmed that Inwelle Centre had instituted libraries in Ozalla-Ezimo and Inyi, all in Enugu State, and that hinterland communities.

She enlightened the audience on the meaning of the NGO which is taken from the name of an Ogidi ancestor Enwelumadu – which literally means “I have somebody.” She emphasized that the concept of Enwelumadu guides the vision and mission of the NGO. Inwelle Centre seeks to create a world in which indigent youths and women can acquire the necessary skill that will enable them to take charge of their future. This it does by combining access to learning, life skills, job skills and remedial education as a tool for making indigent youths and women employable and self-employable. She believes that anyone who has someone to help will go far in the quest for self-sustenance. She affirmed that one of the strategies for achieving Inwelle vision is to locate Satellite Resource centres in villages and Inwelle Centre has set a goal of establishing up 200 satellite centres in hinterland communities in

She went on to say: “Inwelle Study and Resource Centre (Inwelle Centre) focuses its activities on leveraging the youths to break their poverty cycle. Inwelle Centre has four major projects which are “Catch them Young,” We plan to establish three more satellite centres in 2013-2014 project year. One of these three centres, sponsored by Global Fund For Women, San Francisco, California, USA is what we here to establish today. Centre staff visit Satellite Centre, at least once a month to facilitate educational workshops and seminars and to teach computer skills to the 2013 boot camp participants sponsored by Inwelle Centre and Ogidi family Union. These participants will in turn teach computer classes at this Satellite Centre as well as coach primary school pupils in their school work.

Profile of Odida Ogidi

Odida Ogidi has a population of about 8,000. The youths in this area of ogidi are restless and restive. The problems the youths in this village face are based on so many circumstances the two glaring ones being lack of counselling, guidance on how to select careers, and the the get rich quick syndrome which tends to push them into stealing, armed robbery, kidnapping, and obtaining by false pretence. The issue of I. T. illiteracy in the village also impede their ability to access information on the internet or to take advantage of the endless possibilities of skills acquisition in the I.T. field to enhance their lives and to make a living. Most parents can afford to buy computers; therefore, they young people do not have access to computers. Odida Ogidi is populated mostly by teachers and civil servants.

The indigene do not do well in trading. Hence, the village can not boast of successful business people or the money bags who can bring money into the community. Therefore, locating a resource centre which will give access to learning to the youths of Odida is still in keeping with the integrity and the culture of this village which can boast of Professors of English, Mathematics, Engineering, and Law, etc. two Reverend fathers and a Reverend Sister, Pentecostal Church Pastors. The indigenes are known for their kindness, accommodating nature and love for education; hence, the village gave acres of land to the catholic Church to build a boys' secondary school and also gave land for the only Poly-technic in Ogidi.

Girls, Technology, and Peace in Nigeria. Paper to Be Presented at the Seventh Inwelle Centre Annual Symposium, 19th December, 2013

By Prof. Christiana Okechukwu

Since 2008, Inwelle Study and Resource Centre, Enugu has been holding an annual symposium to mark the end of its project year. These symposia are designed to create awareness for parents and the entire community by selecting themes aimed at sensitizing parents to the potentials of the girls to engage in any field or skill for which they have aptitude and not be circumscribed by society's prescription of suitability and unsuitability of certain professions or skill. Recently, the endless possibilities of the power of science and technology, especially computer technology to create areas of empowerment for girls have become a critical focus on Inwelle Centre symposia. Not only are computer skills acquisition deemed to be avenues of profitable venture for indigent girls in hinterland, but it has become a tool for self liberation, self protection, and peace forging in their various communities, as girls use phones to share information, aid in prevention of violence against fellow women, and indulge in information gathering to prevent sexual harassment both in colleges and in the work place. We believe strongly that we cannot speak of peace and technology in Nigeria when we exclude the bedrock of the future generation—girls--the people that, once they gain the power of technology, have the power to extend its use into the future and way beyond our present imagination. The ubiquitous use and the endless possibilities of technology in the ever shrinking globe dictate that technology must be consubstantial with peace. Nigeria has not seen it fit to equip its youths, especially indigent girls in the villages, to acquire this survival tool which, like Prometheus's gift of fire, is capable of deciding the place of any country in the global village and the country's level of peaceful existence. It is against this backdrop that we will present a paper focusing on girls, technology, and peace in Nigeria.

We need to use the social media to call for real stories of women from our various communities - stories of survival and rising above adversity in conflict, stories of combating violence against women, stories of interventions, stories of women's achievements in spite of obstacles, stories of women becoming agents of change, peacemaking and peace building. When we bring these stories to the forefront of our campaign to eliminate violence whether against women or against men, we start a conversation, a dialogue that will act like seeds sown on various soil compositions. Some might not germinate but some will germinate and bear abundance fruit. We plan to start an active blogging on inwellecentre.org. Such stories will be the bedrock of our blog. The world will learn from us and we will learn from the world bloggers who will visit our website and leave comments. The world is so closely linked together in this century that people everywhere tap into in each other's resources and resourcefulness. Story telling is both entertaining and educational to the audience. More importantly, it is therapeutic to the story teller. The story teller unburdens pent up emotions and exhales psychologically and emotionally. Thus putting him or herself in a state of reflection and self-reflection..the action that deadens and blunts the edge of violence. For once an aggrieved individual indulges in rumination on the events that led to the perceived slight or actual wound, the individual is one step away from indulging in a thoughtless act of violence. This points us to the popular Igbo story about the kite, the duck and the hen. The duck escaped being dinner for the kite because the duck silently walked away from an aggressive attack while the hen became a perpetual dinner for the kite because she returned fire for fire.

The future belongs to the young people. They should not be molded to break the future into smithereens. They should be leveraged to make things happen for the good , not for the bad. The must have the responsibility to do what they can

Academics: Mentoring Programme

Two of Inwelle Centre long term goals are to establish an academic journal and to establish a scholar-mentoring scholar/artist mentoring artists programmes. Hence the centre has positioned itself and built its capacity to serve as a credible place where foreign scholars seeking to do research in the region will find resources and even find accommodation. There is token fee for this service. We also welcome donations for this service. The Centre also has a scholars-mentoring-scholar project. Most of this will be in form of distance learning and area lecturers will be charged fees to take advantage of this service. Inwelle Centre is painstakingly building the on-line community that will subscribe to its Journal of Social Issues and writers that will contribute to this journal.
